Tucked away in a corner of the Greater Kailash-1 market is Haute Saute, the all new hub for youngsters. The café is a perfect hub for get togethers, parties and evenings out. It is based on a global theme in terms of food and interiors and serves French, Italian and Mexican cuisine.

True to its name, chefs at Haute Saute have retained the authentic flavour of each dish. Everything served here has a distinct taste and aroma.

The good thing about this place is that everything here, right from the staff and interiors is young and vibrant.

Though the service is quick, the quality of the food is not compromised. The food sits light on the stomach. You eat well without getting the feeling that you have hogged on everything that is on the platter.

The menu is elaborate and one can see that painstaking efforts have been made in choosing the food. There are many new names and variations not found in such cafes in the city. Not surprising, since the owner has a hotel management background.

Even die-hard papaya haters will not turn down the papaya salad served here. It is good to start your meal with.

Of course, you can also choose to begin your meal with soups like laska.

Among the host of starters, we chose to have sausages served with olives, which again is not found in many menus. Those who like seafood can go in for the delectable prawns.

We went in for the thin crust meat pizza as part of the main course and on the chef's strong recommendation, chicken parmigiana, a chicken dish served with mashed potatoes. This, he claims is an all new dish not found in other menus in the city. Haute Saute also has variations of fish dishes. You only have to pick the one you like.

In the dessert section, although there is chocolate pudding, you can also go in for vanilla brulee.
